Cuny, 1986* This paper published by the Refugee Policy Group explores refugee participation in emergency relief operations It begins with an examination of the state of the art Although refugee participation is an approved concept the author the President of Intertect maintains that real participation is lacking In order to show this he describes the underlying assumptions of participation the various schools of thought regarding participation and the reasons why participation often encounters resistance He concludes that the trick for the refugee assistance agencies is to find a balance between participation in decision making and technical requirements He then briefly treats five issues in refugee participation accountability determining appropriate leaders stacking volunteer vs salaried workers changes in leadership In the third section he analyzes several constraints to refugee participation such as economic constraints ideological restraints and social constraints The importance of refugee participation is discussed and opportunities for increasing refugee participation in all phases of an emergency operation are described from needs assessment to project monitoring and evaluation In a brief conclusion the author stresses that refugee participation is essential for effective relief operations and that it should be undertaken from the onset of a relief operation because of its effects for the post relief phases as well as immediate benefits
