(Indian Economic Development) (Chapter - 2)(Indian Economy 1950-1990)

(Class - XII)

Answer 18:

IPR 1956 was adopted in order to accomplish the aim of state controlling the commanding heights of economy. According to this resolution, industries were classified into following three categories:

Category 1: Those Industries that established and owned exclusively by the public sector

Category 2: Those industries in which public sector will perform the primary role while the private sector will play the secondary role. That is, the private sector supplements the public sector in these Industries.

Category 3: Those Industries that are not included in category 1 and category 2 are left to the private sector.

The government indirectly control the private sector by way of licence. By licensing system, tax holdings and subsidies government could promote industries in a backward region that will, in turn, promote the Welfare and development of that region.

Further, in order to expand the scale of production, private sector needed to obtain licence from government. This was supposed to keep a check on the production of goods that are socially undesirable and unwanted.
